2025-2030 Strategic Plan.

“The people who call our region home deserve policies that advance justice and equity, a good quality of life, and opportunities to support their local community in ways that will be felt today and for generations to come. With our new strategic plan, The Trust is working in the following areas to build a New York where everyone thrives.”

—Amy Freitag
Trust President through May 2026

We EMBODY New York’s spirit and diversity in our people and the ways we work.

We FUND solutions that expand the prosperity and power of everyday New Yorkers, strengthen public systems, and improve quality of life.

We LEAD with partners who want to tackle the region’s critical challenges, use our voice to speak out, and collaborate with others for greater impact.

We continue to EVOLVE to meet our mission, both by growing our community and supporting our internal teams.

From the Chair

Celebrating You.

“The stories in this report are a testament to the unstoppable spirit of New Yorkers.

For every challenge 2025 brought to our region, there was a community working together to address it—neighbors, nonprofits, foundations, businesses, and civic leaders sharing resources and expertise to drive change.

The pages ahead celebrate these partnerships. You’ll read about how our dedicated donors helped emergency food programs reach more New Yorkers during November’s SNAP cuts, how our grants supported families organizing for universal child care, and how we brought nonprofits together to expand services for immigrants and LGBTQ+ New Yorkers.

Amy Freitag, who stepped down from her role as Trust president in May 2026, championed these partnerships. She helped us strengthen our relationships with donors and nonprofits and connect with more New Yorkers across all five boroughs, Long Island, and Westchester as she led us into our second century of service to the region.

Amy’s legacy of openness and collaboration shines through each of the stories that follow, and we’re excited to carry that forward together under the leadership of our general counsel and interim president, Carrie Trowbridge.

I hope you will also see yourself in the accomplishments this report highlights, none of which would have been possible without this remarkable community we share. Thank you for being a part of it.”

Spreading Good by the Billions.

Impact is measured by so much more than numbers, but they still help tell our story.

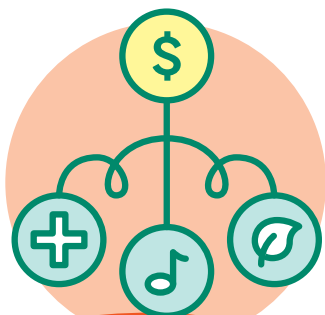

In 2025, The Trust made more than 11,000 grants totaling over $233 million to support nonprofits across New York City, Long Island, Westchester, and beyond. We welcomed hundreds of new donors, established dozens of new funds, and used our grants to respond to urgent needs and invest in systemic change. Together, we can do even more. Reach out to us at giving@thenytrust.org to get involved.

Since 1924,
we've made over $5.8 billion in grants.

In 2025, the New York Pollinator Conservation Fund made 34 grants totaling $3.2 million to local organizations to support habitat restoration, research, and education in service of protecting bees, butterflies, and other pollinators essential to biodiversity, agriculture, and healthy ecosystems statewide. Inset: A donor tours a honey-bee hive on Governors Island. Stronger Together.

“When challenges feel too big for any one person or organization, The New York Community Trust plays a unique role—harnessing the power of collaboration among donors and other funders, public partners, and the nonprofit leaders working on solutions to some of our region’s most intractable problems.

Because we are both close to our donors and deeply embedded in the communities we serve, we can see where support is needed and how to make it go the furthest. And by connecting donors to organizations with smart strategies and the capacity to deliver, we help to ensure that each gift builds on the last.

The result is more than a series of individual contributions. As you will read in the pages that follow, it is a growing network of investments that reinforce one another, accelerate progress, and compound over time to deliver lasting change across New York City, Long Island, and Westchester.”

—David Calle, Trust donor

In 2025, The Trust’s commitment to investing in New York’s green spaces—the Long Island Pine Barrens, the Bronx and Saw Mill rivers, the Brooklyn Greenway, Staten Island’s Freshkills Park, and more—continued through projects that included urban forestry, water quality monitoring, and pollinator habitat restoration.

Growing Urban Microforests

Urban tree canopies shade and cool city streets, improve air quality, provide homes for wildlife, and add natural beauty. Yet New York City’s urban forests are up against air pollution, invasive species, disease, limited space, and climate events such as wildfires, extreme heat, and flooding.

“Trees are really heroes for the climate, and the city has some great tree-planting projects. But we’re running into limits on where to put those trees and how to make sure they thrive alongside the communities who depend on them,” said Brad Oberle, associate curator at the New York Botanical Garden (NYBG). “Microforestry is an emerging solution to this problem, where we pack as many trees as possible into a very small place with lots of community investment to get those trees established quickly and growing fast.”

With a grant from The Trust, NYBG researchers are working to create dense urban forests by identifying native trees that thrive in microforests across the five boroughs and building a demonstration microforest in the Bronx. Its team is also exploring how these forests can contribute to climate sustainability goals.

The Trust can support urban forestry and other environmental projects thanks in large part to New Yorkers who have created legacy funds with us.

Mark Burstein discovered The Trust while working for the New York City Department of Sanitation in the early 1990s, when our grant helped the city launch its curbside recycling program. Burstein and his husband, David Calle, later established a fund at The Trust to support the environment and improve life for all New Yorkers in perpetuity. They knew our grantmakers would ensure their legacy responds to changing needs for future generations.

“In 50 years, a team of experts will be doing what we can’t do: researching great nonprofits to support,” said Burstein. “New York City can be an incubator for environment solutions that could be very powerful, and we want some of our resources to support that effort.”

Dr. Ellen Birenbaum spent her career helping people with HIV/AIDS. She first encountered The Trust decades ago, when we made a grant to the community health organization where she was working. She learned that The Trust was one of the first foundations to respond to the HIV/AIDS crisis in the early 1980s.

“I just know that this organization’s heart is in the right place,” Dr. Birenbaum said. Her legacy fund will support community health and gardens in New York City and ecological protection on Long Island.

Grading Local Water Quality

“On the South Shore of Long Island, there are hundreds of spots that are monitored. But the problem is, everybody monitors water quality differently,” said Robyn Silvestri, executive director of Save the Great South Bay. “You can’t compare the data. And if you can’t compare the data, you can’t synthesize it into a letter grade.”

With funding from The Trust, the nonprofit is standardizing protocols for monitoring the bay’s water pollution levels. It will use this research to produce its water quality report card, which will translate complex scientific data to help residents and local politicians track environmental changes across the bay.

treasured green spaces make communities healthier, more livable, and more climate resilient.”

For Food. Forever.

“You have to look after your neighbors,” said Peter Levin, an attorney and retired public school teacher.

Peter and his wife, Anna, a former member of the New York City Planning Commission who is also an attorney, created a donor-advised fund at The Trust knowing we could help them identify meaningful projects to support.

In November 2025, the Levins were among dozens of Trust donors who responded swiftly when a government shutdown threatened SNAP benefits for more than 3 million New Yorkers.

“It was a really scary time—just before Thanksgiving. It wasn’t just, ‘I can’t buy food.’ It was, ‘I can’t pay my heating bill. I guess I won’t enjoy a holiday meal with my family,’” said Greg Silverman, CEO of West Side Campaign Against Hunger (WSCAH). “The only bright spot was the quick and massive philanthropic response. It allowed us to open more distribution points and buy and distribute more food.”

Thanks to our generous donors, The Trust quickly raised over $1 million for seven nonprofits, including WSCAH, that were leading the response.

“It can be tough to know where to give in moments of crisis, when time is of the essence,” said Rebecca Mandelman, The Trust’s EVP and chief philanthropic officer. “Our donors look to us for our local expertise and ability to mobilize support quickly. They also value the opportunity to unite behind a cause and give alongside others—it’s a meaningful experience that helps each individual make a bigger difference.”

In a city that speaks 800 languages, improving the pantry system goes beyond stocking shelves. Many New Yorkers are reluctant to seek help, or struggle to find food pantries in their neighborhoods, especially as locations and schedules change during periods of surging need.

“It’s no secret that there is a really large stigma right now around people who might not speak English, and that creates a greater fear of accessing food when services aren’t available in their native languages,” said Claire Bleiler, chief of staff at Lemontree Foods. “Being able to meet people where they are is really important in getting through that barrier.”

In 2025, Lemontree used a Trust grant to connect 300,000 New Yorkers with food pantries, soup kitchens, and public benefits through its multilingual helpline and online directory. Its newly launched WhatsApp channel helps it reach immigrant communities and others who rely on the app as their main form of communication.

Investing in Long-Term Change

After we supported advocacy that won free school meals for all NYC students in 2017, our grants in Long Island and Westchester helped Community Food Advocates land another historic victory: free school meals for all New York State public school students, starting in the 2025–2026 school year.

Like our grantmaking team, many Trust donors seek ways to invest in a more equitable region.

Through their fund, the Levins have supported our city's immigrants and older adults and championed human rights and social justice.

"We really like the community foundation model," Ms. Levin said. "We can bring our own ideas, but also access The Trust's services to expand our understanding of the areas we're interested in."

"No one should have to choose between paying rent and feeding their kids. That's why our grantmaking responds to emerging needs while also advocating for systems and policies that serve all New Yorkers."

For Artists. Forever.

“Carnival came out of the fight for cultural expression and emancipation,” said Sandra Bell, a third-generation Carnival costume designer and producer with City Lore, which is using a Trust grant to help immigrant and folk artists preserve and share their cultural traditions.

Bell, who immigrated from Trinidad at age 12, produced “J’Ouvert Genesis Immersive Experience,” an exhibit at Lefferts Historic House in Prospect Park highlighting the pre-dawn festival that kicks off Carnival in Trinidad and the West Indian Day Carnival Parade in Brooklyn.

“‘J’ouvert’ is French for ‘opening of the day.’ We start out at 3:00 a.m. and end when the sun comes up, because that was the only time the emancipated Africans were allowed to have their own kind of Carnival,” Bell said. “They had to go back to work when the sun came up. It was a hard-fought battle for them to get time to celebrate in the way they wanted.”

Creating Community Through Arts Education

Children need space to create, invent, and explore. But school settings too often fail to encourage all students to express themselves.

With a Trust grant, Ifetayo Cultural Arts Academy is providing afterschool programs in Brooklyn rooted in cultural traditions from Africa and the African diaspora. Students study art forms such as West African dance, djembe drums, and gospel music, and develop original work exploring social justice issues.

While 76 percent of students in Long Island’s Westbury School District are Latine, the schools provide few Spanish-language offerings.

Teatro Yerbabruja is using a Trust grant to provide Spanish-language performing-arts workshops in these schools.

“It is beautiful to perform in a different language,” said Margarita Espada, the nonprofit’s executive director. “It creates a sense of belonging, where students learn that they have a community beyond school and home.”

Our legacy funds, created to support New Yorkers in perpetuity, along with our donor-advised funds, fuel thousands of grants each year to help local arts and culture thrive.

Jim Schmitz, a visual artist and creative technologist based in the Lower Hudson Valley, supports Westchester arts nonprofits through his donor-advised fund at The Trust.

“I know how fulfilling it is to create art,” Schmitz said. “And I want other people to have the same opportunities.”

Danielis, a Teatro Yerbabruja student, agrees.

“Theater pushed me in ways I didn’t expect,” Danielis said. “It taught me to believe in myself, feel more confident, and understand that my story actually matters.” ■

Celebrating Westchester's 50th

From New Rochelle to Peekskill, The Trust is dedicated to working with nonprofits and donors who share a common goal: ensuring everyone across the county has the rights, resources, and opportunities to thrive.

“The Trust is proud to work in—and for—our beautiful county. Local partnerships and ever-growing community support are the secrets to creating a more equitable region and improving the quality of life in Westchester.”

—Laura Rossi
Vice President
The Trust – Westchester

1975

While The New York Community Trust had been making grants in Westchester since 1926, it wasn't until 1975 that we opened our Westchester office, originally known as The Westchester Community Foundation. In 1976, we made $25,000 in grants to nonprofits throughout the county focused on housing, health care, and social services for young people. Today, our annual Westchester grantmaking totals more than $7.5 million.

1986

We established the Westchester Fund for Women and Girls to address the dearth of philanthropic dollars dedicated to this population. The fund has awarded more than $2 million in grants to nonprofits providing legal aid for domestic violence survivors, leadership programs for high school girls, support for female veterans, and more.

2002

Hispanics in Philanthropy and the Westchester Community Foundation opened the Apoyo Fund to invest in promising nonprofits and emerging leaders serving the Hispanic community. Today, many of the fund's historic grantees, including Neighbors Link, El Centro Hispano, and the Community Resource Center, have grown into multiservice agencies with leaders who are recognized statewide as powerful advocates for immigrant rights.

2011

We marked the beginning of Community Matters, a decade-long collaboration with the Jacob Burns Film Center. More than 30 films were screened, covering issues from disability rights to nuclear power. Post-film discussions sparked debate and encouraged thousands of attendees to drive positive change for their communities.

2014

The Dominican Sisters of Hope partnered with our Westchester office to create the Dominican Sisters of Hope Empowerment Fund, which promotes social justice and systemic change. The fund has granted over $2.3 million to more than 50 nonprofits working to build a more equitable county: improving pay equity and protections for immigrant workers, winning affordable housing for kinship caregivers, delivering justice to incarcerated older adults, and more.

In 2025, we established The Westchester Fund for Civic Engagement to support local journalism, voter participation, Census 2030 outreach, and other community-led efforts that nourish civic life.

Grants Driving Change.

“I’m grateful to have had the chance to work so closely with local nonprofits, foundation colleagues, government, and donors during my 15 years at The Trust. Together, we’ve helped protect young immigrants from deportation, advocated to close Rikers, improved reading instruction in city schools, launched a rapid response during the COVID shutdown, and so much more.

For my next chapter, I’m excited to take my love of community foundations to my new role as president of the New Hampshire Charitable Foundation. The Trust, our donors, and local nonprofits will be lucky to have Irfan Hasan, who has directed many of our most important initiatives over the past 26 years, lead our grantmaking after my departure. I look forward to celebrating what all of you will accomplish together for our region.”

—Shawn V. Morehead
Executive Vice President and Chief Program Officer through June 2026

“The stories that follow highlight some of the remarkable achievements of local nonprofits during a year that brought relentless pressures, from funding cuts to surging community needs. The programs we’ve had the honor of supporting exemplify New York’s grit and drive to empower communities across New York City, Long Island, and Westchester.

In 2025, we helped improve mental health services, curb youth homelessness, expand legal aid for immigrant New Yorkers, and strengthen nonprofits—to name just a few examples of the accomplishments we supported under Shawn Morehead’s outstanding leadership. I look forward to continuing this work with our grantmaking team, donors, and nonprofit colleagues.

Together, we will work to ensure every New Yorker has the opportunity to thrive.”

—Irfan Hasan
Interim Chief Program Officer

A Promising Alternative to Psychiatric Hospitalization

New Yorkers experiencing a mental health crisis are typically routed to emergency rooms or inpatient care—costly and often traumatizing options that offer few benefits beyond short-term stabilization. Peer-led crisis centers, popular in Europe, show stronger clinical results. With a Trust grant, Community Access opened NYC's first peer-led crisis respite center, offering professional medication management and round-the-clock support from trained peer counselors and clinical providers. Our Rudolf and Anna Marie Vetter Memorial Fund (est. 1977), created to prevent suicide and support crisis intervention, helped make this grant possible.

Bolstering Social Work Training to Meet Growing Needs

Social workers are critical to addressing the surge in mental health needs and economic difficulties facing New Yorkers. Yet many communities face a shortage of these professionals, while schools of social work grapple with increasing budget cuts. Thanks to donors who created funds to support this field, The Trust made $3.3 million in grants in June 2025 to five nonprofits that employ social workers and five universities that train them. The grants support partnerships and programs that prepare professionals to meet escalating needs and advocate for social justice within their communities.

Preserving Affordable Housing

Nonprofit community development corporations are the backbone of affordable housing in New York City, but rising maintenance costs and lagging rent payments are leaving these groups in dire financial straits. The Association for Neighborhood and Housing Development is using a Trust grant to help preserve and stabilize existing affordable housing units by analyzing financial risks facing nonprofit-owned buildings and developing policy recommendations to prevent evictions and maintain affordability. Our David and Mary Warfield Fund (est. 1973) made this grant possible.

Expanding Free Child Care

Child care costs are a key driver of New York's affordability crisis. With a Trust grant, New Yorkers United for Child Care is mobilizing parents and engaging policymakers to advocate for free child care for all children under age 5. These efforts helped win commitments from Mayor Mamdani and Governor Hochul to launch free child care for 2-year-olds, starting with 2,000 seats that will open in New York City in the fall of 2026. The Lucy Wortham James Memorial (est. 1939), created for the good of the region, and Drexel Burnham Lambert Fund (est. 1995), created to support and educate children, youth, and families, made this grant possible.

New Center Tailors Dementia Care to Older South Asian Adults

Dementia affects more than 5 million Americans, but a shortage of bilingual providers and a lack of care that incorporates cultural practices and norms can prevent immigrant communities from getting quality treatment. With a Trust grant, India Home opened a day program in Queens for older South Asian adults with dementia that integrates clients' cultures and languages into its services, which include meals, activities, and respite for caregivers. This grant was made possible by our Adel and Leffler Families' Fund for Queens (est. 1993) and Katharine A. Park Fund for the Elderly (est. 1982).

In 2025,
The Trust made
$1.46 M in grants to reduce homelessness
among older adults.

Support for LGBTQ+ New Yorkers

LGBTQ+ young people and older adults face high rates of housing instability, mental health challenges, and barriers to health care and legal protections. In June 2025, The Trust made $1.6 million in grants to 10 nonprofits, including the Ali Forney Center, SAGE, and The Door, that are expanding advocacy programs for transgender and gender-nonconforming older adults and offering queer young people mental health care, transitional housing, know-your-rights trainings, and more.

For years, debates about LGBTQ+ people in sports have fueled hostile rhetoric and exclusionary policies. The Brooklyn Community Pride Center is using a Trust grant to create affirming sports spaces for queer and gender-expansive adults, offering healing, resilience, positivity, connection, and joy. Grants Driving Change

Rapid Response for Long Island Immigrants

As Long Island's immigrant communities face increasing ICE operations, growing mental health crises among young people, wage theft, and other challenges, local nonprofits are striving to meet emerging needs. Through our Emergency Response Fund for Long Island Immigrants, Trust grants helped 15 organizations—including CARECEN, Long Beach Latino Civic Association, and OLA of Eastern Long Island—expand emergency legal support and case management and strengthen partnerships among immigrant-serving nonprofits across the island.

An Ally for Hardworking Nonprofits

Staten Island's 1,500 nonprofits receive less funding per capita than those in other boroughs, particularly for programs serving immigrants, children and families, and older adults. This long-standing strain on resources, amid growing needs, has stymied organizational development, workforce support, and advocacy. A Trust grant is helping Nonprofit Staten Island expand its tailored technical assistance and coaching services, strengthen leadership development, and advocate for equitable funding and policy priorities across the borough's nonprofit sector. Our Francis Florio Fund (est. 1974) made this grant possible.

Strengthening Local Journalism in Westchester

Solid investigative journalism keeps readers informed and holds public officials accountable. Yet Westchester faces a growing gap in local reporting on how state policy affects communities throughout the county. With a Trust grant, the nonpartisan nonprofit newsroom New York Focus is expanding its regional investigative reporting by growing its team; producing in-depth stories on housing, education, and economic policy; and collaborating with local media outlets to maximize story reach and impact. Our Westchester Fund (est. 1975) made this grant possible.

Jazz Great's Legacy Brings Music Lessons to Queens Kids

The Louis Armstrong House Museum is a creative incubator for artistic excellence and a community gathering space for families in the multicultural neighborhood of Corona, Queens, where access to music instruction in public schools ends in the early grades. With a Trust grant, the Museum is providing individual trumpet instruction, loaned instruments, and performance opportunities for neighborhood children ages 8 to 18. This grant is made possible by the Musical Arts Fund (est. 1939), which helps music students who need financial assistance.

Philanthropy for all.

“I’ve had the pleasure of knowing and working with many thoughtful, generous people who may not think the term ‘philanthropist’ applies to them.

But I disagree...

...Philanthropy works best when people from all walks of life take part. At The Trust, we believe that every gift, made with care and intention, qualifies. It is the thoughtfulness and dedication behind a gift that sets it apart.

A core part of our mission is to help New Yorkers, families, businesses, and other funders give with purpose and impact. While our donors have unique stories, resources, motivations, and goals, what unites them is a desire to help their community and support lasting change.

Our donors also love learning about issues impacting our region, getting expert advice, giving alongside like-minded New Yorkers, and the satisfaction and hope that comes with being a part of The Trust’s community.

Reach out today to get started. Being a philanthropist is easier than you think.”

Why a donor-advised fund at The Trust?

Those who already give money directly to nonprofits may wonder, “Why should I give through a donor-advised fund?”

Great question! Here are 5 reasons:

1. We can invest your funds for growth, meaning your money often goes further than it would with direct donations.
2. We make it easy to give a variety of assets, like stocks, retirement funds, or even real estate. This can make it easier to give larger amounts, since these assets may be given as pre-tax income.
3. Trust DAFs come with expert grantmaking support: We introduce you to great local groups through one-on-one philanthropic advising, online giving guides, and educational events. We also review your grant suggestions to ensure organizations can put your gift to good use.
4. You'll have the chance to participate in unique Donor Exchanges and community giving opportunities.
5. Our donors appreciate that their fees support an organization building a more just and joyful region.

How do I use a donor-advised fund?

Once you name your fund and your fund advisors, you'll make a gift to your fund and choose how we invest it. And presto! You've got your own charitable fund. When you contribute to your DAF, you're eligible for an immediate tax benefit, and then can recommend grants to nonprofits over time.

Putting your fund to work is as easy as logging onto our grants portal. It takes seconds to suggest a grant, and there are no tax receipts to collect. You choose whether to make a gift in someone's honor or your own name, or you may decide to remain anonymous.

“Many local companies have set up donor-advised funds with us to strengthen connections with their customers and give back to the communities they serve. Supporting neighborhood organizations through DAFs is a great way for businesses to set themselves apart.”

“That’s what it means to be human. To care for other humans.”

Tom D’Eletto, M.D., Trust donor

Joe Arena, Trust donor, investment banker

Joe, a Trust donor since 1997, and Tom, a donor since 2015, have turned their charitable giving into both an art and a science. Their fund supports organizations and programs that align with their values—groups that feed hungry New Yorkers, provide care for medical patients, conserve wildlife, support LGBTQ+ organizations, and much more. They’ve also included The Trust in their charitable estate planning to ensure those causes are supported in perpetuity.

Why do they give with us? As Tom puts it, “The Trust really cares about the impact you want to have now as well as the legacy you want to leave.”

Scan or click the QR code to watch a short video featuring these philanthropists.

Joe and Tom have made grants to the Lustgarten Foundation, an organization devoted to finding a cure for pancreatic cancer.

“When we have philanthropic ideas we want to explore, The Trust is a place we can go where people actively collaborate with us.”

Deborah Ragin, Trust donor, retired psychology professor Luther Ragin, Jr., Trust donor, retired philanthropy executive

Donors since 2002, Deborah and Luther converted their private family foundation into a fund at The New York Community Trust to carry on their family’s historic commitment to racial and economic justice in the United States. Luther’s relatives played a pivotal part in early school desegregation efforts in the American South, and today their family uses their fund to support a range of arts, cultural, religious, justice, and educational organizations that are contributing to a more just and equitable world.

Luther and Deborah use their donor-advised fund to support a variety of nonprofits, including the NAACP Legal Defense Fund.

“I’m not a billionaire. I can’t single-handedly seed organizations, nor do I have the capacity to research, select, and track grants. But at The Trust, I feel like I can make a real difference by combining my money with others’ and having it professionally managed and distributed with a sense of urgency and care.”

Rachel Miller, donor since 2016, member of the Excelsior Society

“I’m retired now, but I had a rewarding career in the nonprofit health and human services sector here in New York City. At almost every place I worked, The Trust was a reliable and rigorous supporter. Whether it was employment programs, public health initiatives, community development, or child-care services, The Trust was there—and during difficult times, too, not just at the dawn of a sexy project.

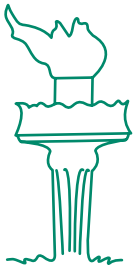

I sort of knew that The Trust’s funding came from individuals and families who pooled their resources for impact, but it wasn’t until much later in my life, when I’d accumulated some resources of my own, that I thought about how I could plug in to this community of donors.

I’m committed to alleviating poverty and strengthening communities in New York City. When my husband died in 2013, I created a fund at The Trust. I named it for a place he loved.”

Watch a short video highlighting why donors from different neighborhoods chose The Trust to leave their legacy.

Celebrating the Excelsior Society.

Excelsior members each bring their own unique charitable goals to a community that shares the desire to create a better world for future generations.

They are people who have laid the groundwork for charitable legacies with The Trust through wills, trusts, beneficiary designations, and other estate arrangements.

If you have included us in your will or other estate plans, we'd love to honor you in our Excelsior Society. Of course, membership is optional.

Legacy Fund vs. Today's Challenge

Goats on duty: Kraft Fund fights invasive species on Long Island.

A grant to the Sands Point Preserve Conservancy, made possible by the environment-focused Henry Phillip Kraft Family Memorial Fund (est. 1996), is improving biodiversity and bolstering native ecosystems.

Fast-growing plants like English ivy and mugwort choke habitats for birds, pollinators, and small mammals. Thankfully, goats love to eat these plants, and are an effective, ecological, and charming solution. The funding also supports public education and land management planning for Long Island's most significant natural spaces.

Legacy Fund vs. Today's Challenge

Girls rise up: Williams Fund supports growth and leadership.

The Mildred Anna Williams Fund, created to help girls and young women, is supporting the work of Jahajee (pictured), a Queens-based Indo-Caribbean organization dedicated to gender justice.

Our grant is funding a program that helps young people confront mental health challenges and gender-based violence. Through one-on-one counseling, mentorship, and advocacy training, participants build community and develop leadership skills.

Legacy Fund vs. Today's Challenge

New hearts, new hope: Janson Fund advances research for pediatric transplants.

For children with congenital heart defects, an animal heart might be their best chance at long-term survival. The Trust made a grant from its Ethyl Janson Fund (est. 2014), created to research treatments or cures for diabetes, cancer, or heart disease, to the NYU Grossman School of Medicine for work in this area.

Children in need of heart transplants often face long waits due to a shortage of donor organs. Researchers are exploring whether genetically engineered animal organs could help meet this need. The work focuses on understanding immune responses in children, laying the groundwork for future clinical trials, and expanding possibilities for lifesaving care.

Legacy Fund vs. Today's Challenge

Hidden danger, stronger response: Griffith Fund helps city confront domestic violence.

We're using the health-focused Linda A. Griffith Fund (est. 1970) to help the Mayor's Fund to Advance New York City strengthen the city's response to residential 911 calls.

First responders to domestic violence cases can fail to recognize all the signs of harm. Our funding is helping to train health care providers and law enforcement, improve coordination across agencies, and support hospitals in adopting clearer clinical guidelines—making it easier to identify cases earlier and better protect survivors.

Legacy Fund vs.
Today's Challenge

A safe way out: Mertz Fund helps human-trafficking survivors reclaim their lives.

The Trust used its LuEsther T. Mertz Fund (est. 1995) to support Garden of Hope's work with Chinese survivors of human trafficking. LuEsther created her fund to champion human and civil rights and several other causes close to her heart.

New York City is a hub for human trafficking, and immigrant women from China are at particularly high risk. Garden of Hope provides outreach, financial, legal, and counseling services to help survivors, particularly Chinese-speaking women, overcome barriers to access safety, stability, and dignity.
